RMS End of Week Update 2/6/2026

Governor Hochul Wins Convention Vote To Be Democratic Nominee For Governor

Governor Kathy Hochul easily received the state Democratic Party's backing to be the nominee for governor at their convention in Syracuse today, shutting out her own lieutenant who has mounted his own campaign against her.

Governor Hochul received just over 85% of the weighted vote among the state Democratic Committee.

Lt. Gov. Antonio Delgado received 14%, failing to receive the 25% needed to automatically get a spot on the primary ballot in June. Delgado will now have to petition to get on the ballot if he wants to move forward with his campaign.

Governor Hochul received about the same percentage of the vote as she in 2022 against New York City Public Advocate Jumaane Williams.

The governor, running for a second full term of her own, earlier this week selected former New York City Council Speaker Adrienne Adams as her running mate. The choice creates New York's first all-female ticket and if elected, Adams, a Democrat from Southeast Queens, would become the state's first Black female lieutenant governor.

"As Donald Trump attacks this state relentlessly and Bruce Blakeman bends the knee before him, I need a fighter in my corner who'll stand strong for New York families. Adrienne Adams is that fighter," Hochul said in a statement obtained by NY1.

Sporting ties to political powerbrokers like Rep. Gregory Meeks, Queens Democratic Party Chair, Adams lives in South Jamaica, Queens and grew up in neighboring Hollis.

Governor Hochul has been able to keep the state party's support largely around her, securing the endorsement of New York City Mayor Zohran Mamdani earlier this week and resecuring the endorsement of the Brooklyn Democratic Party after briefly rescinding it after Adams' selection as her running mate.

As of the January filing period, Governor Hochul has raised nearly $12 million for her reelection campaign and the state Democratic Party.

This week Lieutenant governor Antonio Delgado also announced his running mate former Buffalo mayoral candidate India Walton.

February 3rd Special Election Results

Following the four special elections on Tuesday there are now two new NYS Senators and two NYS Assemblymembers in the NYS legislature. There are now four new Democrats in the state Legislature. These are the new members:

Senate District 47

Erik Bottcher (D) won the Senate District 47 seat. The Manhattan seat was previously held by Brad Hoylman-Sigal, who's now the borough president and vacated the seat on January 1st. Senator Bottcher previously served as a member of the New York City Council.

Senate District 61

Jeremy Zellner (D) won the Senate District 61 seat. The seat includes Genesee County and parts of Erie and Monroe counties and was previously held by Sean Ryan, who vacated the seat on January 1st to serve as the mayor of Buffalo. Senator Zellner has chaired the Erie County Democratic Committee since 2012.

Assembly District 36

Diana Moreno (D) won the Assembly District 36 seat. The Queens seat was previously held by Zohran Mamdani, who vacated the seat on January 1st to serve as the mayor of New York City. Assemblymember Moreno is a Democratic Socialist similar to Mayor Mamdani and previously served as communications manager for the New York State Nurses Association.

Assembly District 74

Keith Powers (D) won the Assembly District 74 seat. The Manhattan seat was previously held by Harvey Epstein, who's now on the City Council and vacated the seat on January 1st. Assemblymember Powers previously served as a New York City Councilman.

NYS Joint Budget Hearing on Transportation

The state budget joint hearing on transportation took place this week during which a number of people testified including Miguel Velázquez, president of the New York Public Transit Association (NYPTA) testified that Governor Hochul's proposed 5.75% increase in state operating assistance for public transit upstate and 7.45% increase for downstate public transit, excluding the MTA, is not enough to sustain transit agencies upstate, all of which are facing a structural budget deficit.

NYPTA's testimony asked the state Legislature to increase STOA appropriations for non-MTA systems by at least 15%, provide $349.5 million for Non-MTA capital funding, provide sustainable and dedicated revenues (ex. extending the MTA region $25 annual supplemental vehicle registration fee to upstate counties), and increase DOH funding to $6 million to adjust for years of inflation.

Janno Lieber, chair of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority, was the first to testify before the state Legislature with two requests for lawmakers. The first was for them to support Gov. Kathy Hochul's tort reform proposals to change how damages are calculated after automobile crashes. Governor Hochul wants to limit damages for people who are found to have engaged in unlawful behavior at the time of the crash. She also wants to limit damages for the party that's found to be "mostly" at fault for causing the collision.

The MTA has a stake in those claims because of its fleet of thousands of buses that, despite their best efforts, are regularly involved in accidents. Lieber said he also wants help from lawmakers to pressure New York City Mayor Zohran Mamdani to improve stormwater management.

During Lieber's testimony a shouting match with Senator Mattera took place regarding over a $35 million contract the agency holds with a Pennsylvania-based company leading to Assembly Ways and Means Chair J. Gary Pretlow turned his head toward Mattera and yelled, loudly, "Shut up!". After which Mattera demanded an apology: "You better apologize!" he said. "I think you better watch your words!" Assemblymember Pretlow obliged and then continued as if nothing had happened.
